US Olympic medalist Kelly Catlin dies at age 23

2 Olympian Kelly Catlin, who helped the United States win the women's pursuit team silver medal at the 2016 Rio Games, has died, USA Cycling said on Sunday. The three-time world champion was 23. "The U.S. cycling community suffered a devastating loss with the passing of Kelly Catlin," USA Cycling President and Chief Executive Rob DeMartini said in a statement. "Kelly was more than an athlete to us, and she will always be part of the USA Cycling family. ... Our thoughts and prayers are with the Catlin family. This is an incredibly difficult time and we want to respect their privacy," the statement added. "The entire cycling community is mourning this immense loss." VeloNews reported that Catlin's father, Mark, said in a letter to the publication that she died on Friday night at her home in California. Her father told the publication that she died by suicide.

Paragliders collide in midair, fall to death in San Diego

3 Two paragliders collided in midair above one of the most popular paraglider ports in the United States, falling about 75 feet to their deaths before horrified witnesses, media reports said, citing witnesses and San Diego officials. After colliding, the two men plummeted onto the bluff above San Diego's Black's Beach on Saturday, "twirling, almost like a leaf falling," witness Ryan Bloum, 25, told the San Diego Union-Tribune. Officials did not identify the men, aged 61 and 43. The lesser experienced pilot of the two made a hard turn into the path of the other, San Diego Lifeguard Lieutenant Rich Stropky told the Union-Tribune. The lines of their canopies entangled. One of them stayed airborne for a moment, but both fell from about 35 feet above the top of the bluff to 40 or 45 feet below, Stropky said.

Fodera & Long is investigating claims on behalf of United States servicemen and women who have experienced hearing loss and tinnitus.

In July 2018, the United States Justice Department announced it reached an agreement with 3M for $9.1 million to resolve claims that it sold defective earplugs to the United States government for all branches of the United States military. According to the government's allegations, 3M Combat Arms™ earplugs were sold to the United States government as part of a multi-million dollar per year contract but did not meet required safety specifications.

3M Combat Arms™ earplugs were developed to provide soldiers a single set of earplugs that could be worn in either an "unblocked" position (yellow end in) to significantly reduce, the loud impulse sounds of battle, while still allowing the soldier to hear quieter noises such as commands or enemy dialogue. The earplugs can also be worn in a "blocked" position (olive/brown end in) to significantly reduce, all sounds.

As a result, from 2003-2015 thousands of United States military members were provided with 3M Combat Arms™ earplugs that did not adequately protect their hearing, causing many to suffer some form of hearing loss or tinnitus.

If you were active in any branch of the military any time between 2003 and 2015 and believe you suffered some of hearing loss or tinnitus (ringing in the ears), please contact Fodera & Long via email at info@foderalawfirm.com or call us at 215-569-1212 extension 1.

In budget, Trump to ask Congress for $8.6 billion for border wall

The request is unlikely to pass in the Dem-controlled House.

President Donald Trump on Monday will ask the U.S. Congress for an additional $8.6 billion to help pay for the wall he promised to build on the southern border with Mexico to combat illegal immigration and drug trafficking, officials familiar with his 2020 budget request told Reuters.

The demand is more than six times what Congress allocated for border projects in each of the past two fiscal years, and 6 percent more than Trump has corralled by invoking emergency powers this year.

Democrats, who oppose the wall as unnecessary and immoral, control the House, making it unlikely the president's request will win congressional passage. Republicans control the Senate.

The proposal comes on the heels of a bruising battle with Congress over wall funding that resulted in a five-week partial federal government shutdown that ended in January, and could touch off a sequel just ahead of a trifecta of ominous fiscal deadlines looming this fall.

Asked on Fox News Sunday about the new funding request and if there would be another budget fight over Trump's wall, White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow said, "I suppose there will be ... he's going to stay with his wall and he's going to stay with the border security theme. I think it's essential."

Broadly speaking on the budget, Kudlow told Fox, "The president is proposing roughly a 5 percent across-the-board reduction in domestic spending accounts."

Regardless of whether Congress passes it, the budget request could help Trump frame his argument on border security as the 2020 presidential race begins to take shape, with the president seeking re-election.

"Build the wall" was one of his signature campaign pledges in his first run for office in 2016. "Finish the wall" is already a feature of his re-election campaign, a rallying cry plastered across banners and signs at his campaign rallies.

"It gives the president the ability to say he has fulfilled his commitment to gain operational control of the southwest border," an administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said of the budget request.

"We have provided the course of action, the strategy and the request to finish the job. It's a question of, will Congress allow us to finish the job," a second administration official said.

Funding legislation needs to be passed before Oct. 1 — the start of the 2020 federal fiscal year — or the government could shut down again. If Congress and the White House fail to agree to lift mandatory spending caps set in a 2011 law, steep automatic cuts in many programs would kick in. Around the same time, Trump and lawmakers must agree to lift the debt ceiling, or risk a default, which would have chaotic economic fallout.

Trump's wall request is based off a 2017 plan put forward by Customs and Border Protection officials to build or replace 722 miles of barrier along the border, which in total is estimated to cost about $18 billion.

So far, only 111 miles have been built or are underway, officials said. In fiscal 2017, $341 million in funding was allocated for 40 miles of wall, and in 2018, another $1.375 billion was directed to 82 miles.

For fiscal 2019, Trump demanded $5.7 billion in wall funds, but Congress appropriated only $1.375 billion for border fencing projects. REUTERS

Biden tops 2020 Iowa presidential poll, Sanders gains momentum

The former VP has yet to announce his plans for running.

Former Vice President Joe Biden topped a poll of Iowa voters on Saturday that also showed Sen. Bernie Sanders gaining momentum against him in the No. 2 spot.

Biden, who has not announced whether he is running in the 2020 election, is the first choice for president of likely Iowa Democratic caucus-goers with 27 percent in the Des Moines Register/CNN/Mediacom Iowa Poll. Sanders, 77, got 25 percent.

"If I'm Joe Biden sitting on the fence and I see this poll, this might make me want to jump in," J. Ann Selzer, president of Selzer & Co., which conducted the poll, told The Des Moines Register.

The newspaper's Iowa poll has a long track record of relative accuracy in the state that kicks off the presidential nominating process. In this cycle, Iowa will hold the first contest in the Democratic race in February 2020.

Nearly 65 percent of the voters said Biden, 76, who was also a U.S. senator first elected in 1972, has more experience than any other candidate and should enter the race, while 31 percent said his time as a candidate has passed.

Sanders, a progressive populist who held a rally in Iowa as the poll was being conducted last week, gained 6 percentage points from 19 percent in the group's previous poll released in December. Biden fell 5 percentage points from 32 percent in the last poll.

At least a dozen major candidates already have jumped into the Democratic contest to pick a nominee to challenge Republican President Donald Trump, and Democrats are still waiting for decisions in coming weeks from other big names such as Biden and former Congressman Beto O'Rourke of Texas.

In most national polls of Democrats, Biden has a solid lead while Sanders, who lost the 2016 Democratic nomination to Hillary Clinton, typically is in second. In those polls, Sen. Kamala Harris of California has vaulted into third ahead of other senators including Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, Amy Klobuchar of Minnesota and Cory Booker of New Jersey.

In the Iowa poll, Warren was third with 9 percent of voters, and Harris was fourth with 7 percent. O'Rourke got 5 percent of voters, down 6 percentage points from December.

It was the Register's first Iowa poll since candidates began jumping into the race at the beginning of the year. The poll also surveyed support of likely Iowa caucus-goers on issues that have dominated the early discussion and drawn support from most of the Democratic presidential contenders.

The Green New Deal, a proposal by Democrats in Congress to tackle climate change, was supported in full by 65 percent of the Democratic voters, partially by 26 percent, with 4 percent not supporting. The deal would fund government programs on clean energy and make buildings energy-efficient while helping to address poverty.

Support was also measured for Medicare-for-all, a plan first proposed by Sanders in 2017 to replace the current mix of private and government-financed health care coverage with a universal coverage plan funded solely by the government. It was supported by 49 percent of the likely caucus-goers, partially by 35 percent, with 11 percent not supporting. REUTERS

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez rallies SXSW: 'Start building your own power'

(L-R) Amy Vilela; Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez; producer, writer and editor Robin Blotnick; and Cori Bush attend the SXSW premiere of the Netflix original documentary "Knock Down the House." ALL GETTY IMAGES

Austin, Texas, is brimming over with Oscar winners, tech moguls and social media influencers, but no one drew more heat with her speaker address than Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez.

A serpentine line of conference-goers stretched around the length of Austin's convention center — the longest and most hectic so far this year, a SXSW rep told Variety — to catch Ocasio-Cortez's session, a conversation moderated by The Intercept writer Briahna Gray.

While she's spent the past few weeks grilling former Trump lawyer Michael Cohen and promoting her own documentary and Sundance entry "Knock Down the House," this Saturday was centered on her unlikely rise in the Democratic Party and what it means for the future of the country.

"Part of what happened last year was a crack in the system," she explained, of her election to the U.S. House of Representatives for New York's 14th District. The politician has often said that election winners do not look like her, a woman of color from a working-class Puerto Rican family in the Bronx.

"Suddenly, a lot of other people said, 'Wait a second, maybe I can do this too,'" said Ocasio-Cortez.

The freshman representative is known for an explosive brand of left-facing ideology, whose loud and bold criticisms of Washington institutions (including her own party) were largely credited with helping her gain traction in the race and celebrity status. Her worldview has drawn critics and fans alike.

"History is often revisionist. Martin Luther King is cast as this angelic person that never made anyone mad and just asked for civil rights and got it. Unions were always seen as this great powerful thing that no one ever died for, [to get] a 40-hour work week and a weekend," Ocasio-Cortez said.

While she has often been a critic of the right, Ocasio-Cortez bemoaned what she called the "slow erosion" of American moderates, who masquerade snobbery as cynicism.

"We use cynicism as an intellectually superior attitude and we view ambition as youthful naivete. 'Meh' is worshipped now, for what?" she asked. The representative pointed to a recent Republican-attached amendment to a gun safety bill that requires gun vendors to report undocumented buyers to ICE.

"I've gotten a lot of heat recently in the party because I was really furious about this Republican amendment," she said. "The reason I was so upset is because we have an agency that is separating children from their parents and putting them in cages and injecting them with antipsychotic drugs ... since when did it become the moderate position in America to keep caging children?"

Admittedly, the particular auditorium had more fans than critics. During a Q&A, two young women in Girl Scouts of America vests approached the microphone and introduced themselves as the Radical Monarchs of Austin (an organization that helps create opportunities for young girls of color). They asked Ocasio-Cortez what advice she had for breaking into politics.

"Stop trying to navigate systems of power and start building your own power," she said, to thunderous applause. She shared an anecdote with the girls about how important she felt it was to wear hoop earrings (a staple in fashion canons of the East Coast and the South) to her swearing-in ceremony for the House.

Ethiopian Airlines flight crashes, killing 157

Eight Americans were onboard the Boeing 737 MAX 8.

An Ethiopian Airlines passenger jet bound for Nairobi crashed minutes after takeoff on Sunday, killing all 157 people on board and raising questions about the safety of the Boeing 737 MAX 8, a new model that also crashed in Indonesia in October.

Sunday's flight left Bole airport in Addis Ababa at 8:38 a.m. local time, before losing contact with the control tower just a few minutes later, at 8:44 a.m.

"The pilot mentioned that he had difficulties and that he wanted to return," Ethiopian Airlines Chief Executive Tewolde GebreMariam told a news conference.

"There are no survivors," the airline tweeted alongside a picture of Tewolde holding up a piece of debris inside a large crater at the crash site.

Passengers from 33 countries were aboard, said Tewolde.

Eight Americans were reported killed.

The dead also included Kenyan, Ethiopian, Canadian, French, Chinese, Egyptian, Swedish, British, Dutch, Indian, Slovakian, Austrian, Swedish, Russian, Moroccan, Spanish, Polish and Israeli citizens.

At least four worked for the United Nations, the airline said, and the U.N.'s World Food Program director confirmed his organization had lost staff in the accident.

"The pilot mentioned that he had difficulties and that he wanted to return."
Tewolde GebreMariam, Ethiopian Airlines CEO

One of those reported killed was Tamarind Group CEO Jonathan Seex, from Sweden.

Weeping relatives begged for information at airports in Nairobi and Addis Ababa.

"We're just waiting for my mum. We're just hoping she took a different flight or was delayed. She's not picking up her phone," said Wendy Otieno, clutching her phone and weeping.

The aircraft, a 737 MAX 8, is the same model that crashed into the Java Sea shortly after takeoff from Jakarta on Oct. 29, killing all 189 people on board the Lion Air flight.

The cause of that crash is still under investigation.

A senior U.S. government official said it was too early to tell if there was any direct connection between the two accidents, but that reviewing the issue would be among the top priorities for investigators.

The 737 is the world's best-selling modern passenger aircraft and is seen as one of the industry's most reliable.

A preliminary report into the October crash focused on airline maintenance and training and the technical response of a Boeing anti-stall system to a recently replaced sensor.

Boeing is working on a software patch, while insisting cockpit procedures were already in place to deal with problems that the Lion Air jet experienced.

Ethiopian's new aircraft had no recorded technical problems and the pilot had an "excellent" flying record, Tewolde said.

The airplane, received on Nov. 15, 2018, had flown more than 1,200 hours.

"We received the airplane on Nov. 15, 2018. It has flown more than 1,200 hours. It had flown from Johannesburg earlier this morning," he said.

Flight ET 302, registration number ET-AVJ, crashed near the town of Bishoftu, 38 miles southeast of the capital Addis Ababa, with 149 passengers and eight crew aboard, the airline said.

The flight had unstable vertical speed after takeoff, the flight tracking website Flightradar24 tweeted.

The aircraft had shattered into many pieces and was severely burnt, a Reuters reporter at the scene of the crash said. Clothing and personal effects were scattered widely over the field where the plane came down.

There was no immediate indication of what caused the crash and safety experts said it was too early to speculate, adding most accidents are caused by a cocktail of factors. Boeing said it was ready to help investigate.

At Nairobi airport, many relatives were left waiting at the gate for hours, with no information from airport authorities. Some learned of the crash from journalists.

Robert Mutanda, 46, was waiting for his brother-in-law, a Canadian citizen.

"No, we haven't seen anyone from the airline or the airport," he told Reuters at 1 p.m., more than three hours after the flight was lost. "Nobody has told us anything, we are just standing here hoping for the best."

Kenyan officials did not arrive at the airport until 1:30 p.m., five hours after the plane went down.

James Macharia, the cabinet secretary for transport, said he heard about the crash via Twitter.

Families were taken to Nairobi's Sheraton hotel, but said they were still waiting to hear from airline staff eight hours after the accident.

Russian trolls have 2020 election-meddling strategy

They're already active, the FBI says. And their latest tactics may make them harder to spot.

letters@metro.us

Russian online trolls have shifted their strategy to disrupt the U.S. presidential election in 2020, according to a Bloomberg report.

Instead of creating propaganda, trolls are signing up for social media accounts using fake personas, then using those accounts to amplify the divisive rhetoric of others, cybersecurity experts say.

The Kremlin-linked Internet Research Agency and others may have changed their tactics to circumvent security measures Facebook and Twitter enacted after the 2016 election. Both companies have attempted to crack down on the kind of fake content Russians used to sow discord in the American electorate, including phony news stories, groups and events like racially charged protests.

"Instead of creating content themselves, we see them amplifying content," John Hultquist, director of intelligence analysis at FireEye, told Bloomberg. "Then it's not necessarily inauthentic, and that creates an opportunity for them to hide behind somebody else."

Additionally, some hackers are breaking into devices and using them to create large numbers of social media accounts, populated with real-seeming (but fake) followers. These faux networks can then be used to spread messages and make positions seem more popular than they actually are.

Last Tuesday, FBI Director Christopher Wray warned that social media remains a hotbed for U.S. election interference. "What has continued virtually unabated and just intensifies during the election cycles is this malign foreign influence campaign, especially using social media," he said. "That continues, and we're gearing up for it to continue and grow again for 2020."

Wray said the FBI is working with companies to guard against foreign influence on their platforms.

But determining who should be banned from a platform has always been a tricky prospect. In 2016, Facebook delayed intervening even when presented with clear evidence of Russian trolling, while executives dithered about the company's stance on free speech and its image. Russia's new trolling strategy will make bad actors harder to spot.

On Friday, the Washington Post published the results of a yearlong investigation in which they followed several Russian troll accounts created by the Internet Research Agency. The conclusions: IRA still aims to divide Americans — and they can be surprisingly subtle about it. "Most Americans probably believe that they could spot a Russian troll from a mile away — and that they would certainly never engage with one," the Post said. "The IRA's work is much subtler, often more palatable and always seemingly more organic than Americans may imagine."

Americans drinking more gourmet coffee than ever before: Survey

CARLO ALLEGRI

Americans are consuming more gourmet coffee than ever, but the outlook for future growth may be threatened by increasing economic worries, survey results from the National Coffee Association (NCA) showed on Saturday.

Sixty-one percent of the coffee drunk in the United States is described by consumers as gourmet, according to the results of a survey commissioned by the NCA and released during the group's annual meeting in Atlanta, Georgia.

That is a record-high proportion for a segment that has been steadily growing for the past several years, as consumer preferences have tilted toward finer beans.

Overall daily consumption, however, remains at a similar level to last year, with 63 percent of respondents saying they had consumed coffee within the past day, results of the Jan. 7-22 survey of about 3,000 people in the United States showed.

"While we're not seeing a significant change in the quantity of coffee that people are consuming, there is a clear change in the quality and consideration of each cup."
NCA

"While we're not seeing a significant change in the quantity of coffee that people are consuming, there is a clear change in the quality and consideration of each cup," the NCA said.

Americans continue to mostly enjoy their coffee in the home, with at-home consumption accounting for 78 percent of the total. This is little changed from the previous year, but is down from 84 percent in 2012.

More respondents said they felt they were in a worse situation financially than they were six months ago (15 percent compared to 11 percent last year) which could take a toll on pricier out-of-home and gourmet consumption.

Rising negative perceptions of individual financial situations helps, to some extent, explain why consumption growth did not grow significantly in 2019, the survey noted.

The NCA this year added a new question on respondents' familiarity with cannabidiol (CBD), an ingredient in cannabis of which use as an additive to beverages, including coffee, has grown.

"There's an awareness out there [about CBD] that's growing," said Bill Murray, chief executive of the NCA. "Whether it takes off, and the questions about legality — we'll see," he said.

More Americans are drinking coffee in the afternoon, the survey results showed. Increasing the frequency of consumption remains a major area for potential growth, Murray said.

The survey also noted some demographic nuances. African-American consumption of gourmet coffee beverages grew notably, jumping to 40 percent from 33 percent last year. Their consumption of non-espresso blended drinks, like cold brew and frozen blended beverages, was especially strong and could help drive future growth of the segment, the survey said.

Daughter of Babe Ruth dead at 102

Julia Ruth Stevens remained a Red Sox fan till her death.

Julia Ruth Stevens, the last surviving daughter of Babe Ruth, died Saturday after a brief illness, her family announced. She was 102.

She died at an assisted living facility in Henderson, Nevada, but until just a few years ago had spent an active life sharing the legacy of her father.

Ruth adopted Stevens shortly after he married her mother, Claire Hodgson, in 1929. Stevens was 12 years old at the time.

She was a fan of her father's first team — the Boston Red Sox — but also celebrated the New York Yankees. She served as an ambassador for the Ruth family, appearing at special events.

Stevens threw out the ceremonial first pitch of the final game played at Yankee Stadium — "the House That Ruth Built" — in 2008. And on July 9, 2016, she threw out the first pitch at Fenway Park on her 100th birthday.

She also traveled to various Babe Ruth League World Series tournaments to meet young players and share stories of her father.

"Julia was a loving wife, mother, grandmother and great-grandmother who lived a wonderful, full life during the 102 years that she was with us. As the daughter of Babe Ruth, she had many amazing experiences, which she was pleased to share with eager reporters and fans alike," the family wrote on Facebook.

"Until the very end, she was very proud to call him 'Daddy' and she particularly loved recalling events from 1934 when she went on a 'round the world' tour with her parents. The tour began with a series of 15 exhibition baseball games played in Japan." REUTERS

UK soccer-pitch invader punches Aston Villa player during match

Aston Villa midfielder Jack Grealish was punched in the face by a pitch invader during their 1-0 victory at derby rivals Birmingham City in the English Championship (second tier) on Sunday.

The supporter ran onto the pitch at St Andrew's Stadium and made a beeline for Grealish, who did not see him coming, before landing a punch to the side of his face.

Grealish fell to the turf as a steward and Villa players Glenn Whelan and Tammy Abraham caught the man and dragged him away from the spot.

The Villa captain got to his feet a few seconds later, apparently unhurt, and the match continued after stewards and security personnel had ushered the man, seen blowing kisses to the crowd, off the pitch.

West Midlands police said later a man had been arrested.

"There's rivalry and stuff in football but I don't think there's any place for that in football," Grealish told Sky Sport after the match.

GETTY IMAGES

Grealish had the last laugh after his second-half goal gave Villa all three points to allow them to leapfrog their Midlands rivals and move up to ninth in the standings, a point ahead of Birmingham.

"I just tried to get on with my job really and I think I did. It's the best day of my life; to come here for the first time as Villa captain and score the winner is what dreams are made of," Grealish added.

Birmingham City apologized to Grealish and Aston Villa and said the supporter would be banned from the stadium.

"We deplore the behavior of the individual who committed this act and rest assured he will be banned from St Andrew's for life," the club said in a statement "The club will also support any further punishment this individual may face in the eyes of the law... What happened has no place in football or society."

The English Football League (EFL) condemned the actions of the supporter, promising to work with the relevant parties to address the issue and take appropriate action.

"In all circumstances the playing surface is for players, not supporters, and those playing in the game must be able to do so safe in the knowledge they will not be subjected to this type of behavior."

READER WRITE-INS:

DISPLAY ADDRESS NUMBERS ON BUILDINGS, PLEASE!!

I think this may have been grumbled about before, but all buildings need to have their street number prominently displayed on the outside, and lit at night, for the obvious reasons of police, fire and EMS response. It is not just inconvenient and annoying for anyone trying to find an address, but imperative that residents and businesses are able to be accessed by emergency services in a timely manner. Valuable time cannot be wasted for anyone, especially if it's a life-and-death situation.

Aries Look for new ways to conquer old problems. Call in favors from people you have helped in the past. Don't risk injury trying to do something without needed assistance.

Taurus Look for the safest route and get moving. Feeling passionate about something will fuel the fire and help you reach your goal. Don't trust someone who is trying to take charge.

Gemini Pay close attention to what others are doing, and keep your distance from anyone pledging to do the impossible. A partnership will be laced with uncertainty.

Cancer Call in people you trust to help you get things done. An unusual relationship will have more to offer than you first thought. Pick what works best for you.

Leo Take a closer look at what others are doing. Don't make a decision based on what you are told. Following someone who is pushy will end up costing you emotionally.

Virgo Do what makes you happy. Don't give in to someone who is overreacting or using unfair tactics to get you to do things differently. Use common sense and form stable partnerships.

Libra Consider what you want and work quietly on your own to avoid interference. A joint venture will lead to a disagreement and end up costing you emotionally and financially.

Scorpio You'll be drawn to a unique individual who opens your mind to interesting concepts and possibilities. Discover what works best for you.

Sagittarius Stick to simple and doable projects. Work toward a goal that will advance you, not someone else. Verify information you are given before you take action.

Capricorn Change will bring new and exciting opportunities your way. Dress up your residence to suit your needs. Put comfort and convenience first.

Aquarius Think twice before you get involved in something that may not be legitimate. You are better off chasing your own dreams instead of signing up to help someone else.

Pisces A change will be premature. Make sure you have covered every angle before you agree to something questionable. Know your limits and boundaries to make the right decision. EUGENIA LAST

Megadeth talk the release of their anniversary collection album

"Warheads on Foreheads" is the name of the 35-track album that commemorates the band's 35th anniversary.

GABRIELA ACOSTA SILVA, MWN
letters@metro.us

The group will make an extensive tour around the world. PROVIDED

Megadeth is commemorating their 35th anniversary with the release of "Warheads on Foreheads," a retrospective of their career in 35 songs.

The anthology covers the entire studio career of the band, from their first album "Killing Is My Business" to "Dystopia," and will be available in a special package of three albums and four LPs.

The name of the album is a U.S. military term used to point to efficiency; it's about using the right tool for the job, and these tracks were created for maximum destruction.

Dave Mustaine, co-founder, lead vocalist, guitarist and primary songwriter of Megadeth, reflected with Metro on part of the band's path.

"When I was young, many people told me that I'd better dedicate myself to something else, that I did not need music lessons. I felt frustrated, because that broke my heart and that's why I chose to be a self-taught musician. Music is the way to express myself and is a very important part of my life."

Megadeth's 57-year-old frontman is touring the United States and Canada. He will also play in Latin America at Rock in Rio, in Brazil, on April 10.

"If everyone does their job, things go well. It bothers me to work with promoters that complicate a band's work. I have had bad experiences and I usually warn my friends to work with certain promoters. I am demanding with my music and I am also demanding when I work, especially on tour."

The musician said that he has gone through several artistic stages, but in the end gained perspective and returned to what he likes most.

"This is what Megadeth is. There were several periods in which the band sounded like something else and that was due to the changes in the music industry. I think there was a stage in which metal was forgotten, because you had to be alternative, but in the end, I still do what I like."

This new album material goes beyond music — it shows Megadeth's maturity as musicians.

"I like to be well, in good physical condition. I think I never got to the extreme of following the musician motto "sex, drugs and rock 'n roll." I stopped it in time and I did not have consequences. I love what I do and I worry about giving a good show. If you listen to Megadeth for the first time, I suggest you start with this anniversary album, because chronologically it shows how the band matured at each stage."

Considered one of the four great bands of thrash metal, their influence has reached several generations.

"I'm really excited about 'Warheads on Foreheads,' because with all those songs, the countless riffs, you can go from one song to another without getting bored," Mustaine added.

An inside look at life as a transplant surgeon

ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

There are only a few jobs that can defy the laws of life and death. Transplant surgeons have the unique ability to take an organ or an appendage and have it "come back to life" after attaching it to a patient in need. We spoke with Joshua D. Mezrich, M.D., author of "When Death Becomes Life: Notes from a Transplant Surgeon," about why he got into the field and some of the unexpected things that have come with the job.

What made you want to become a transplant surgeon?

My dad went back to medical school when I was in third grade. He would always tell stories from med school at the dinner table. I think my brothers were sort of grossed out, but I loved them. That was one piece. Of course, I always loved Hawkeye Pierce from "M.A.S.H."! As I went through college, I took the sciences on the side. I majored in Russian but I didn't think I'd go into something with Russian as a career. I took all of the premed [courses] on the side and always remained interested in science and medicine. When I entered med school, I didn't know anything about surgery and I never would have thought in a million years I'd go into surgery or transplant. But, I ended up loving my surgical rotation!

This almost sounds cliche, but it's a true story. My first day on surgery, I went in at, like, 5 a.m. I didn't eat or drink anything and I was in the O.R. all day. Finally, at midnight, my resident told me to go next door to this operation. It was a kidney transplant. This older surgeon was doing the transplant. He had classical music playing and it was really calm and relaxed. When we reperfused the kidney and it turned pink in front of my eyes and urine just started spraying out on to my hands, I was just staring at it, thinking, "I can't believe this works!"

I wondered what other organs can we do this for and could I ever do this. I was really intrigued by the challenge and the mystery of it. I was very aware that someone had just died and this organ was coming back to life. It just struck me as truly remarkable.

In the book, you talk about how people are your puzzles. Is there a sense of gratification or panic in solving such a complex problem?

I try not to panic! I like to use the word "gratification." Or, the word I often use is "satisfying." I think surgery is too hard to be fun, but it is incredibly satisfying. I think everything about surgery is your brain. It's making good decisions and solving the puzzle. Some puzzles are simple with 50 pieces and some puzzles are a bit complex with hundreds or a thousand pieces. When it comes to doing operation, it really is about thinking through the puzzle, taking what the case gives you, and really focusing hard on what it is you're looking at. And if something doesn't look right, stepping back and rethinking it. It does involve a lot of pre-planning, but I'll take a good brain over a good set of hands any day of the week when it comes to looking for a surgeon.

Lots of practice helps. Experience is critical but you just have to watch the signs and stay focused and try to stay positive. When things start going badly you have to find a way to stay strong and not panic. It kind of gets easier in the sense that you get more experienced, but it gets more humbling, too, because no matter how many years you have in, you always find cases that are really challenging.

What are some of the most surprising aspects of the job?

To me, some of the most beautiful stuff has been my interactions with both the deceased donors' families and the living donors. To me, it is so heroic and it's kind of like running into a burning building to save someone. On the deceased donors side, we fly out and get the organs, which is something most people don't realize. When I met my first family, I thought it was going to be this uncomfortable experience because I'm this vulture coming to take apart their loved one. But that couldn't have been further from the truth. Usually there's a big group of people there. They're crying because they just lost this loved one, maybe unexpectedly. Yet, they hang on to every one of our words. They want to know what we're going to do. It ends up being this incredibly positive experience. It makes you realize that this is a gift and our job is to make sure that the gift is given.

The living donors are some of the most incredible people you could meet. But, I think one of the real beauties of this is that in most illnesses, the patient is really kind of suffering alone. The patient endures it alone, they take the tests alone, and ultimately, they can die alone. But in transplant, there is this opportunity for someone to step forward to say, "Let me bare this with you and take a little pain to help you get through this." Being a part of that exchange is really one of the most gratifying parts about being in my field.

Don't sleep on the sportsbooks in AC

Atlantic City has some world-class sportsbooks up and running.

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

WILLIAM HILL SPORTSBOOK

Philadelphia sports bettors are now flush with options when it comes to wagering on games.

There are, of course, the four sportsbooks all within a half-hour drive from downtown. And you can bet online if you're anywhere within New Jersey state limits.

But we should not forget about Atlantic City. The sports betting boom is well underway in AC as well.

Just last week, Tropicana Atlantic City and William Hill opened a whopper of a new book that features the most seats of any sportsbook in Atlantic City (pictured above is former Eagles quarterback Ron Jaworski at the sportsbook).

"We are proud to partner with Tropicana Atlantic City and Eldorado Resorts to open this world-class sportsbook," William Hill US CEO Joe Asher said. "The new sportsbook at the Trop is proof of our collective commitment to provide our customers with the best possible experience. Powered by our industry-leading sports betting product, it will bring added excitement to sports fans that want to watch and wager at the Tropicana."

Tropicana had been operating a temporary sportsbook for several months but this huge upgrade will allow it to compete with the sports-betting big boys in Atlantic City like Ocean Resort, Bally's Resorts and Golden Nugget.

"Sports betting has been an incredible addition to Tropicana," Eldorado Resorts Senior Vice President of Operations-Eastern Region Steve Callender said. "Guests are not only coming to experience the sportsbook. They are also staying in the hotel, dining at our restaurants and enjoying all our non-gaming amenities. We expect to see these positive effects continue with the addition of our permanent location."

Meanwhile, Hard Rock Atlantic City is set to roll out the second phase of its sportsbook this month in time for the start of the 2019 NCAA men's basketball tournament. The first full day of tourney action is a week from Thursday, on March 21.

Sports betting 101: What are totals?

VSiN

When you're looking at the betting odds for totals, this is a reflection of the combined score of both teams. That means that you are looking at whether the combined score of both sides will go over or under a set number. (For that reason, this type of bet is also often called an over/under bet.) For example, the sportsbook might set the total at 66 for an Eagles game against a high-scoring opponent. This means that they predict that the two teams will score a combined total of 66 points. You will then place a wager on whether the actual combined score will be over or under that amount. If you think that one or both teams has a particularly strong offense and it will be a high-scoring affair, you would bet over. If you think it will be a defensive struggle, ending in very low scores on both or either side, then you would bet under. If the final score is something like 44-40, then the combined score would be 84, meaning the game is an over. If the final score is something like 33-32, making the combined score 65, then it is an under.

GETTY IMAGES

Sometimes, the combined scores will land right on the total. In our example, if the score ended up being something like 34-32, then the combined score would be 66, exactly the predicted total. This situation is called a push or a tie. In these cases, no one wins the bet, and you would simply get your money back. To avoid these situations, sportsbooks will often set the total at a half number, like 66.5. This way, if the final combined score was 66, it would be an under, and a 67 would be an over.

Betting smart on conference tournaments

Welcome to college basketball championship week.

With conference tournaments all over the college basketball card this week, you're going to be tempted to bet "futures" prices to win events you'll be watching on TV.

Unfortunately, casual bettors typically have a very poor sense of pricing. Fans do often have good instincts for how teams should generally rank on the ladder. Many also have a keen eye for "late-surgers" who should probably be getting more respect. But what makes a smart bet? The instincts just aren't there yet.

This issue is exacerbated for bettors who grew up following horse racing. That sport pays nowhere near true odds because of large track edges. Combine that with a general sense of how sportsbooks price futures (also with a big house edge), clearly BAD numbers have been "normalized" into consumer consciousness. Anyone making their own estimates when pricing a conference tournament is probably going to be way off.

Here's a quick example of the wrong way to do it. You like watching the ACC. Your horse-racing thought process put Duke at even money, Virginia at 2/1, North Carolina at 4/1 … STOP! That's more than 100 percent already and you haven't looked at other quality teams.

Duke's even money means 50 percent, Virginia's 2/1 is the same as 33 percent (1 divided by 3), and North Carolina's 4/1 is 20 percent (1 divided by 5). That trio alone adds up to 103 percent.

Florida State and Virginia Tech are ranked in the top 20. They've surely got a shot. Louisville's chances are greater than zero. Couldn't Syracuse, NC State, or Clemson get on a lucky run? Even if it's just 1 percent each…that's part of the 100 percent total universe.

Here's an easy way to get around that. Don't think initially about odds like 3/1, 9/2, 7/1, 20/1, or 50/1. Focus instead on percentages. There's a 100 percent certainty that somebody's going to win the tournament. No greater, no less.

Mentally assign percentage chances to each team that add up to exactly 100 percent for that league. THEN, convert those percentages to what the corresponding odds would be. THEN compare your odds to market prices. You'll likely see that very few futures bets are worth making.

GETTY IMAGES

A team with a 60 percent chance to win should be 2/3, 50 percent is even money, 40 percent is 3/2, 33 percent is 2/1, 25 percent is 3/1, 20 percent is 4/1, 10 percent is 9/1, 5 percent is 19/1, 2 percent is 49/1, and 1 percent is 99/1.

If you don't make a good-faith effort to capture true odds on that 100 percent scale, you'll be attracted to prices that seem good but actually aren't, or to long shots that still aren't paying what they should.

Spend some time playing around with your favorite conferences this week before you see any prices. That's a good exercise, and will help break years of conditioning created by bad odds scales.

If you dig deep, you may also find some sleepers that are good bets to cover a spread or two before running out of gas. Those don't make sense on futures prices but could still make you some money on a game-by-game basis. JEFF FOGLE

Flyers–Senators betting preview

Those looking to back the Flyers (33-27-8) on Monday night won't get a great price, as the dreadful Ottawa Senators (23-40-6) are in town, but they look like a solid addition to any moneyline parlay.

Philly's offense has ramped things up in the absence of standout rookie netminder Carter Hart, scoring 30 goals in their last seven games. The play of right wing Jakub Voracek has stood out in particular, as he's tallied 11 points in his team's last five tilts. Center Sean Couturier has found the twine in three of his last four games, and captain Claude Giroux is in the midst of a seven-game point streak.

Brian Elliott has been serviceable between the pipes since Hart was felled by a minor injury. The team has been mum regarding a return date for Hart, but he is apparently inching closer to getting back into the lineup.

The Flyers have won six of their last seven games as a home favorite, per Covers.com, and are 17-6 over their last 23 contests. They should take care of business against a tired Ottawa team that's 5-15 in their last 20 games at the end of a four-games-in-six-nights situation.

What's next for Eagles with Antonio Brown off the board?

Antonio Brown is off to the Raiders after the Eagles were briefly linked to him.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Antonio Brown will officially be traded to the Oakland Raiders on Wednesday. GETTY IMAGES

AB won't be making his way to the City of Brotherly Love.

The Pittsburgh Steelers are trading star wide receiver Antonio Brown to the Oakland Raiders for a 2019 third- and fifth-round draft pick. The deal will become official when the new league year begins on Wednesday.

Oakland will also restructure Brown's contract to make him the highest-paid wide receiver in the NFL.

Per The Associated Press, the new contract will total more than $50 million over a three-year span.

The deal catapulted toward completion early Sunday morning after a mostly quiet weekend.

It was reported by CBS' Jason La Canfora on Saturday that the Philadelphia Eagles were "closely linked" with the Steelers on a possible trade involving Brown.

The 30-year-old would have provided a major upgrade to the Eagles' receiving group. With Golden Tate an unrestricted free agent this offseason, Brown could have created an imposing trio alongside Alshon Jeffery and Nelson Agholor.

While the Eagles would have been able to come up with the assets that Oakland parted with to get Brown, offering that monster new contract would have been more of an issue.

As it stands, the Eagles have $23.6 million in cap space this offseason, so the approximate $16 million average annual salary would have depleted much of the franchise's funds for other significant areas of need, like at running back.

In a perfect world, the acquisition for Brown would have been the perfect gift for Carson Wentz, who will be keen on trying to prove to the Eagles and the fan base that the loss of Nick Foles wasn't a mistake.

Foles, who led the Eagles to their first-ever Super Bowl two years ago and an unlikely run to the playoffs last year, is expected to sign with the Jacksonville Jaguars when free agency begins on Thursday.

With Brown off the board, the Eagles will have to search elsewhere for discounted upgrades at the wide receiver position, whether that comes in free agency or at the 2019 NFL Draft.

The Eagles will be looking for a true deep threat on the outside, especially after the failed experiment that was Mike Wallace after the veteran went down with a broken fibula in Week 2.

Wallace, who is a free agent, could be one of the cheaper options considered by the Eagles along with the likes of John Brown, Jermaine Kearse or JJ Nelson.

The draft might provide a far more promising option for Philadelphia, which picks 25th. AJ Brown of Ole Miss — a physical receiver with the size capable of becoming that deep threat — is expected to be available toward the end of the first round.

Do-or-die time for Flyers

After another dominant showing in New York, the home stretch is a daunting one for the Flyers.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The Flyers are still in the hunt for a playoff spot. GETTY IMAGES

If the Flyers played every game on Long Island, they might be challenging the Tampa Bay Lightning for the top spot in the Eastern Conference.

Instead, with time running out on their playoff hopes, Philadelphia still holds an outside chance of sneaking into the postseason.

The Flyers are coming off another dominant showing in New York against the Islanders, taking down the Metropolitan Division's second-best team, 5-2. It was the second straight clinic put on by the team at Nassau Coliseum in as many weeks after they beat the Islanders, 4-1, on March 3.

It was an impressive response after being beaten down by the defending Stanley Cup champions and current division leaders the Washington Capitals, 5-3, on Wednesday. They've now won five of their last seven games to remain in the chase, an unlikely scenario considering the dreadful start to the season that saw GM Ron Hextall and head coach Dave Hakstol fired.

Captain Claude Giroux continues to lead the way as he's in the midst of a seven-game point streak in which he's posted three goals and nine assists (12 points) during that stretch.

Entering Sunday night's slate of games, the Flyers remain just five points out of the final Eastern Conference Wild Card spot with 14 games left to play.

Monday night provides a winnable game at home against the NHL-worst Ottawa Senators. The Flyers will be rooting for the Islanders on the very same night as they host the Columbus Blue Jackets, who hold that coveted final playoff spot in the East.

But Philadelphia's schedule becomes far more brutal in the coming days, which made their performance against the Islanders — and tonight's game against Ottawa — so important.

On Thursday, the Flyers host the Capitals before flying up to Toronto to face the high-powered Maple Leafs just one night later. After hosting the in-state rival Pittsburgh Penguins on Sunday, the one team that separates the Flyers from the Blue Jackets in the Montreal Canadiens are next.

To put it simply, it's make-or-break time for the Flyers, who could see their season end quickly should things go south this week.

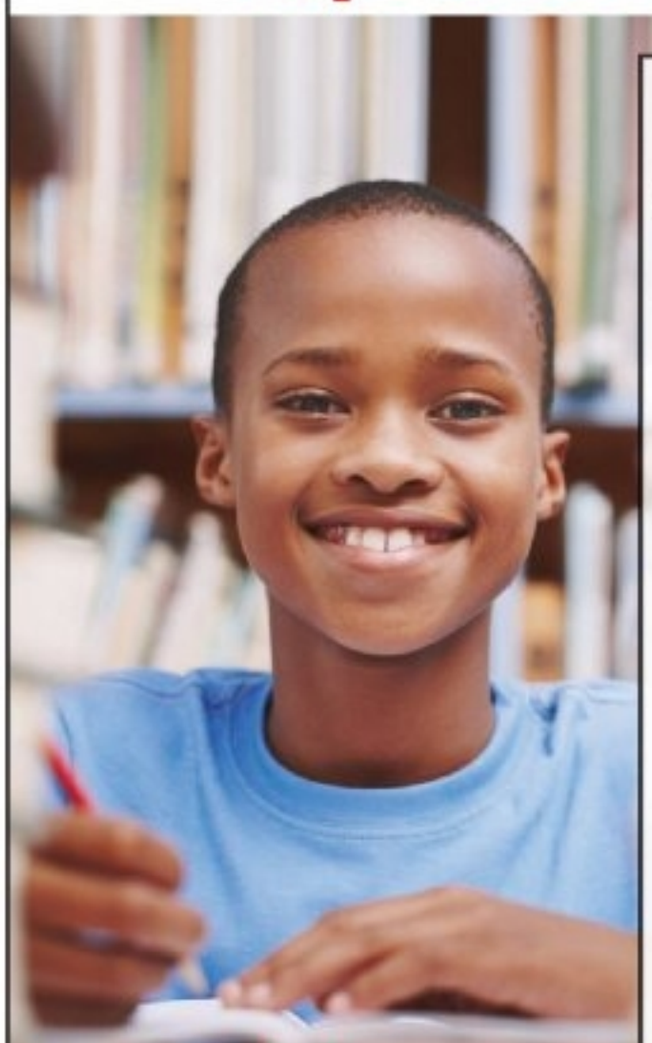
TEMPLE

Is your child staying up too late?



Researchers at Temple University are conducting a research study to learn more about how improving children's sleep and other health behaviors affects their weight status and overall health.

To be eligible your child must:

Be 8 – 11 years old

Sleep 9.5 hours or less each night

All families will learn how to improve their child's sleep. Some families will also learn strategies for improving eating and activity behaviors. Families who are eligible and enroll in the study will be compensated for their time.

Please call 215-707-5782 to see if you and your child qualify for our study or scan this code on your mobile device:
